Light My Fire

We ventured into the Valley of Fire to put the McLaren Artura to the test on the twisty, sandstone-flanked road that traverses the park. Formula 1 teams return to the grid this month, so we're looking back on the highs and lows of Red Bull Racing's 2022 season.

DRIVER'S SEAT

The universe seems to work in cycles, doesn't it? What goes around, comes around, as they say. The world of cars operates on the same principle, which is why Cadillac is attempting a return to the highest echelon of automotive coachbuilding that it occupied in the first half of the 20th century. This brand once represented the best of the best, so it can do it again; right?

Enter the Celestiq (page 12), Cadillac's flagship electric vehicle that debuted on the market with a starting cost that exceeds $300,000 — double the next highest starting price for a car wearing the famous wreath and crest badge.

The Rolls-Royce-rivaling price tag isn't the only thing that makes the Celestiq unique among Cadillacs. Each one will be a custom commission for its owner, just like Cadillacs used to be when Woodrow Wilson was president. While you can make the Celestiq your own with custom colors, materials, and finishes, they all will come with a big 111-kWh battery, good for 300 miles of range, and a 0 to 60 mph time of 3.8 seconds.

Has Cadillac come full circle since its halcyon days, which were followed by decades of mundaneness and mediocrity? We think so, which is why the superlative Celestiq graces this month's cover. We can't wait to witness Cadillac's return to form.

Something else that's returned is a hybrid-powered McLaren supercar. The original P1 was a plug-in hybrid electric vehicle (PHEV) with over 900 horsepower from its dual powertrain, but the brand lost its taste for electricity after that. Until now. The new McLaren Artura reverses the trend with a PHEV powertrain that is similar to the old P1, though with less power, befitting its grand touring mission. Read our driving impressions of the Artura on page 30.

The circle of life brings us to another topic in this month's issue. On page 36, we'll detail which automakers take their history into their own hands by offering official restoration services for vintage models. There's no better way to ensure your past represents you well in the present than to have a hand in its preservation for the future.

Speaking of preserving, there's one engine type in particular with a foot and four toes in the grave, and that's the V12. We expect the value of V12-powered cars will increase as the few remaining modern examples die off and leave a new car market entirely bereft of these mechanical beasts. On page 20, we explain why something powered by a V12 might be your next best investment.

Formula 1 cars used to be powered by V12 engines — that ended with a rule change in 2000. With the 2023 season starting up again this month, we're spotlighting the rise of Red Bull Racing and reigning champion Max Verstappen on page 40.

And just like that, we've reached the end of this month's letter from the editor. But where one thing ends, another begins. You've got the whole March 2023 issue ahead of you, so enjoy what we put together, and happy hunting for your next great purchase.

Combining rich history and bold futurism, this new Cadillac reaches for the stars.

WORDS: Tyler Rampersaud

Each Celestiq is a blank canvas. Owners get to collaborate with artisans throughout the build process.

W

With over a century of history, Cadillac spent a very long time known as the pinnacle of automotive luxury, and while many of us still colloquially refer to the "Cadillac of (something that isn't a car)," the automotive world has changed, and the luxury car arena is saturated with stiff competition. It's been quite a while since Cadillac has stood alone at the top, but with the new Celestiq, the American luxury legend seeks to regain its throne.

Even among Cadillac's luxury peers, the Celestiq isn't just any flagship model. It's a halo car, the likes of which haven't worn a Cadillac badge in a great number of years. Using General Motor's Ultium platform, the Celestiq is all electric, and boasts 600 horsepower and 640 pound-feet of torque with dual-motor all-wheel drive for a smooth and powerful ride and a driving range of 300 miles. Despite its immense size and presence, and its luxury focus, it can still accelerate from a standstill to 60 mph in 3.8 seconds.

The performance is just the beginning of what makes the Celestiq impressive. Sold at a staggering price above $300,000 and limited in production number, each example will be personally commissioned, and the design and building process will be an involved and memorable collaboration between the owner and Cadillac's artisans. Acting as a canvas for each owner's personal tastes, every Celestiq will use unique materials and finishes based on what the owner desires. Cars will be crafted by a small team of artisans at the Eero Saarinen–designed Global Technical Center in Warren, Michigan, where GM made an $81 million investment.

Placing faith in the Celestiq to transform the Cadillac brand, designers took inspiration from some of Cadillac's most famous cars, such as the 1933 V16 Aerodynamic Coupe and the 1957 Eldorado Brougham. They even brought back icons like the Cadillac Goddess, which is encased in the central rotary dial of the car. With ambitious features like the Smart Glass fixed roof with four individual zones, doors that open and close electronically, and the bespoke construction of the car itself, the Celestiq promises an ownership, configuration, and driving experience that is irreplicable.

The new Cadillac Celestiq and its production process involves 300 patented and patent-pending technologies. Coupled with its exorbitant appointments, personalization potential, and incredible craftsmanship, Cadillac is betting on the new flagship to take the brand — and American automotive luxury as a whole — not just to its former glory, but to a futuristic level beyond that.

POWER PLAY

Purchasing a V12-powered vehicle is not only a solid investment but also a glorious act of preservation.

WORDS: Tyler Rampersaud

Whether it was a Ferrari, a Lamborghini, or even a Pagani, many ultimate dream cars for enthusiasts all over the world have had V12 engines snarling under their hoods. Even some of the greatest luxury cars and grand tourers employed the use of the engine. But as time has passed, it seems like the automotive industry has had no choice but to evolve, leaving engines like the V12 in the past.

Of course, those aspirational vehicles that we lock onto at a young age often change or become discontinued by the time we grow up and are finally able to own them. Still, the V12 fading into the rearview feels different.

The industry is at a crucial turning point, with electric and hybrid cars showing their performative ability and changing the landscape of engineering and design conventions. Don't get us wrong: This progression is great. However, it's impossible to deny the bittersweet nature that many of the cars we love the most, and one of the key components that makes them so great, is going away. If you have your eyes on one, there is no better time to buy a V12-powered vehicle than right now.

For starters, it will soon be very difficult to get your hands on even a used model with a V12 under the hood. The simple fact that so many enthusiasts have dreamt of owning a V12 car indicates scarcity will become an issue, leading to a rise in value. Decades from now, V12 engines are sure to be the stars of international auto shows and concours events.

Already, we've seen manufacturers wave goodbye to the V12 within their lineups, and the ones that haven't done so yet are undoubtedly close to pulling the plug on those amazing engines. The V12's decadeslong history has shaped the world of driving as we know it. In this sense, owning such a car ought to be considered a noble pursuit in that you are preserving automotive history. While the V12 might be slipping away, our love for it certainly won't, and while we doubt you'd need much convincing to buy one, we think it's a wise decision.

It may be bittersweet that V12-powered vehicles are fading from production. But that indicates a rise in value is sure to follow.

LIGHT MY FIRE

We take the McLaren Artura for a spin through the ancient sandstone formations of southern Nevada.

WORDS: Gabriel Vega Cortés

"Keep the speed down," the park ranger says, as I enter Valley of Fire State Park in Nevada. Enormous red sandstone formations flank his small, gated office split only by a winding, undulating two-lane road. It's early on a Friday morning, and thankfully, the tourists have decided to sleep in.

"Yes sir," I reply, sinking into the driver's seat of my McLaren Artura. I press the accelerator. No noise emanates from the twin central exhaust tips, yet it creeps forward, emitting only a hum.

The Artura is the first McLaren since the P1 that can putter around on battery power alone. In E mode, a 34-pound axial flux E-motor nestled within the Artura's transmission bell housing generates 94 horsepower and 166 pound-feet of torque, allowing it to reach up to 81 mph for up to 19 miles. Press its red start button in the center console just south of a new tablet-style infotainment system, and you don't get a blaring cold start, you get a hum. The Artura is electric by default.

Past the right side of its leather-wrapped steering wheel, a drive-mode selector integrates neatly into the digital instrument cluster. Two clicks, and we're in sport mode, bypassing comfort and landing just short of race mode. I look in the rearview mirror, and I see only sandstone. A deserted, winding road lies ahead.

A blaring engine start sends the hum packing, filling the cabin with vibrations and a low-toned growl. At idle, the 120-degree 3.0-liter twin-turbocharged V6 sounds unmistakably like a McLaren. At full tilt, it produces 577 horsepower and 431 pound-feet of torque, which, assisted by its E-motor, delivers a total system output of 671 horsepower and 531 pound-feet of torque.

GABRIEL VEGA CORTÉS

The Artura's engine is tiny but mighty, weighing only 353 pounds. It sits 2 inches lower in the chassis than the old V8 and revs out to 8,500 rpm.

The road gets twisty, and the accelerator meets the floor. Even with the complexities living under the Artura's innovative yet familiar skin, the car is eager to respond. A launch sends the rear wheels spinning, which continues through second gear; but this mighty engine is far from finished. I keep my foot in it — the digital speedometer almost blurs as it rockets forward.

Despite its athleticism, the Artura doesn't live on the razor's edge. It is easy to drive quickly, corners completely flat, and is almost comically stable as it shifts its 3,300-pound mass. With a 7.4-kwh battery pack, it manages to maintain a lower curb weight than a Lamborghini Huracán and Porsche 911 Turbo S. The Artura not only has power but plenty of suspension, clever aero, solid hydraulic steering, and brakes to match — a welcome sight, as smashing into a sandstone formation isn't on my agenda today.

This is easily one of the most communicative supercars. It demands driver involvement and doesn't require triple-digit speeds to raise your pulse, prioritizing excitement at any speed, which stands out in a segment long consumed with meaningless stats.

Up ahead, the road straightens, and the exit comes into view on the horizon. The Artura has crossed the park in what feels like a split second. I flick back down to E mode, crawling almost shamefully to the ranger, waiting to see my paperwork.

"So, how was it?" he asks.

"Just a nice, chill drive," I report.

He looks at me like a parent who's caught you red-handed, but before he can mutter a response, I holler, "Have a good one!" And just like that, I hum into the distance.

FERRARI

FACTORY SPEC

Classics find new life at the hands of the automakers that originally manufactured them.

WORDS: Jordan Aquistapace

As the industry continues to evolve into a world driven by state-of-the-art electric vehicles, passionate car collectors cherish the early-age sports cars that paved the way. The importance of encapsulating these historic examples proves to be a topic that all manufactures can unanimously agree upon, which is why OEM factory restorations are becoming more popular among the community. Brands like Ferrari, Lamborghini, Porsche, and Aston Martin are inviting clients to restore their most coveted collectibles using factory services.

While the word "restoration" carries a vague definition in the realm of high-dollar models, the common goal is to preserve as much of the original car as possible. The meticulous process starts with a consultation that focuses on specific areas of interest, determining the condition of the body shell, the interior equipment, and the engine. This stage helps to break down each component to its barest in order to grade whether parts should be retained, refurbished, or replaced. For the team at Porsche's Classic Factory Restoration workshop, specialists draw up rough estimates based on photos to prepare customers for future bills.

Having a detailed plan of attack with room for surprises, engineers get to work, disassembling vehicles for paint and bodywork. Although clients can choose from an array of colors and materials using factory archives, owners are given the opportunity to add a personal touch with paint-to-sample colors and other bespoke interior configurations. The latest paint technology is applied for an improved finish with increased durability, and the interior trim is handcrafted using the finest materials.

With aesthetics sorted by the experts, engine management is next on the docket. When dealing with monstrous 12-cylinder platforms from the early 1980s and '90s, Lamborghini Polo Storico preserves its heritage of performance with Original Spare Parts (OSP) for its classic cars. Fine-tuning each engine to operate as it did the day it rolled off the production line. Anniversary Tours, Auto Shows, Concours d'Elegance, and Track Shakedowns are just a few of the many activities organized for owners to showcase their newly restored examples. Under the supervision of each respected manufacturer, an exclusive Certification of Authenticity is awarded to each vehicle restoration to verify the originality of the individual components.

Today, we celebrate OEM factory restorations as the glue that will forever hold a connection to the pioneers that shaped the supercar and hypercar world.

RED BULL RACING

2022 season standing:
1st

Max Verstappen's championship season in 2022 wasn't all roses. Right out of the gate, both Verstappen and Sergio Perez posted DNFs at the first race in Bahrain. While results improved in the second race of the season with a first-place finish for Verstappen, he followed up the victory with a retirement in Australia. After that, Verstappen and Perez were by far the most dominant duo during the 2022 season. For 2023, Red Bull Racing remains focusing on improving its car while dealing with a 10 percent reduction in its aerodynamic testing budget and the imposed cost cap. If Red Bull can put together an even better car and start this season with a hot streak, there may be no stopping the team.

TERROIR TALKS

At Château Monestier La Tour, a commitment to biodynamic winemaking processes bears fruit.

WORDS: Roberta Naas

Winery owner Karl-Friedrich Scheufele and his team care for approximately 30 hectares of vines (17 of which produce red grapes), yielding approximately 70,000 bottles of wine annually.

Nestled within the famed Bordeaux region of France, in the rolling hills of Bergerac, Château Monestier La Tour is changing the way certain French vintners make wine. With roots dating back to the 18th century, when the structure was a monastery, this winery recently completed a three-year conversion period that, as of 2017, marks it as a certified organic winery. Beginning with the 2018 vintage, bottles reflect the culmination of the brand's commitment to organic growing and biodynamic principles of wine production.

After purchasing the winery in 2012, owners Karl-Friedrich Scheufele (co-president of Chopard) and his wife, Christine, made a substantial commitment to take a modern approach to winemaking using biodynamic and organic methods. The brand's La Tour Grand Vin has since won several awards, as has its Cadran label. The wines and cuvées are free of sulfites, and all are reflective of the uniquely infused terroir.

When the Scheufele family took over Château Monestier La Tour, they began by completely renovating the château and the grounds, some areas of which date back to the 13th century. Following a renovation by previous owners that took place from 1994 to 1998, The Scheufeles restructured according to the original Renaissance architecture and paid close attention to the land.

Their goal: to make wines that respect nature and embrace the local flavors. Interestingly, the idea of preserving the land parallels the ethos of Chopard, where ethical and Fairmined gold are now the norm. At the winery, the idea of biodynamics is applied not only to the vineyards, but also to the treatment of the harvest and wine. In total, though, it is a slow and meticulous venture — something Scheufele is used to in the world of watchmaking.

COURTESY OF CHÂTEAU MONESTIER LA TOUR

"I have learned that, like watchmaking, winemaking requires a lot of patience and attention to every detail," he says. "Luckily, I have a lot of practice in that and have a firm relationship with time."

Converting Château Monestier La Tour to organic certification has been, for the Scheufeles, all about preserving the nature and balance of the region. In the long term, their implementation of biodynamic agricultural processes should yield qualitative improvements in the terroir. This produces the medley of depth, freshness, and fruity flavors in the resulting wines. The couple enlisted the help of consultant oenologist Stephane Derenoncourt to implement the organic processes and produce Bergerac, Côtes de Bergerac, and Saussignac wines.

Essentially, biodynamic agriculture eschews pesticides, biocides, fungicides, and other artificial fertilizers. It is all about natural preparation and composting for the soil to instill flavor. As such, Château Monestier La Tour has a rich and vivacious herb garden and herbatorium right on premises. Because some of the desired plant species are not naturally present on the grounds, a garden ensures a continued supply of important herbs and flowers like chamomile, nettles, and thyme. Once mature, the plants are dried and stored, so they can be used as sprays to strengthen the vines. The herbs are all carefully selected for their abilities to fight disease or pests, or to enrich a flavor profile. In spring and fall, they are used to stimulate or slow growing. During spring months, the vines are stimulated with certain plants that "warm" them; in fall, they transition to a dormant state with the help of cypress or ivy.

Château Monestier La Tour officially opened its doors to visitors this past summer. A stroll through the winery, its vineyards, and the surrounding grounds presents a great lesson in nature, passion, and dedication. Touring the facilities offers a fantastic understanding of how these natural wines get their wonderful notes of lavender, berries, and more, all while preserving nature. It also offers grand insight into the patience and perseverance required to create organic wines.

Once the site of an ancient monestary, the storybook Château Monestier La Tour nestles atop a hill in the Bergerac region of southwest France, where it overlooks the medieval city of Monestier.

THE FIELDS

LUXURY FLY-IN COMMUNITY

LOCATED IN SOUTHEAST, TENNESSEE only a few miles outside of Chattanooga sits a 1500 acre master planned fly-in resort and community. Built by pilots, for pilots, Phase 1 will be centered around a 4300' runway, FBO/Community Center, a farm-to-table restaurant, and the community's own local grocer. Future phases call for a boutique hotel, brow lots overlooking the runway, and equestrian themed areas of the development. Living at The Fields offers many lifestyle benefits, including no state income tax, the ability to access your aircraft from your home, and the central location unlocks easy travel to many major cities along the east coast. Taxiway access lots are now available for reservation.

Aircraft operated by Skyways Charter

"I'm very impressed by JetASAP. I can't think of a better way to book private aircraft. The app literally sources quotes directly from aircraft operators. It has saved us around 25% on our flights, and the savings add up! I think it may be the best kept secret in private air travel."
